Plant Equipment

Advanced Hygiene Control with HACCP and Electrolyzed Water Systems

Since its establishment, our company has placed great importance on its social responsibility and has implemented strict standards across its manufacturing facilities. In particular, we were among the first to introduce strong electrolyzed water generators, which are highly effective in eliminating bacteria that cause food poisoning.

We maintain comprehensive hygiene management to ensure the highest level of safety, covering everything from the cleaning and sanitization of processing equipment, preparation tables, and flooring to overall facility hygiene control.

Our "Ikura" is carefully selected from autumn salmon caught off the coast of Rausu, one of the most severe and frigid seas influenced by strong ocean currents. We use only premium raw roe harvested during the peak season from early to late October, when the eggs are considered to be at their finest quality. Each year, we carefully determine the optimal timing to ensure that only fully matured roe is used in production.

The autumn salmon from Rausu migrate northward as far as the Gulf of Alaska and the Bering Sea, where they spend 3-5 winters. From mid-August to November, they then migrate south along the Kuril Islands, traveling through waters known as the ideal temperature range for salmon habitation. Following this "salmon road," they return to the waters near the Shiretoko Peninsula. This migration route is regarded as producing some of the highest-quality salmon roe across all of Hokkaido.

Frozen Product

Our Commitment to Seafood Quality

Founded in 1973, we pioneered the successful freezing and preservation of fresh salmon roe in Japan. Since then, we have continued to develop our own original products, creating a wide range of popular seafood items. With a large-scale freezer facility directly connected to our production plant, we maintain a stable inventory to ensure reliable supply, shipping, and delivery.
